

Year: 2005

Location: United States

Program: Residential

Boomerang House

The roof of this boomerang house swoops through the scattered trees, floating in the landscape like an airplane wing in the sky. Ribbed and wrapped with a plywood stress skin, the roof further resembles not only conceptually but also constructionwise the wing of an aircraft. The house sits at the apex of an inlet, and the oval pond situated in the bay of the boomerang creates the illusion of the inlet running into the site.